Yesterday, there was a large wedding on the lawn of the Goddard Mansion, and I am sure it was the happiest day of the Brides life! The weather was wonderful and the sounds from the event were clearly heard here by the abutting neighbors.

I am having work done on the outside of my house and the contractor was here on the day of the wedding trying to get ahead of his deadline. When he realized that there was a wedding, he stopped all of his work so that he would not be a nuisance to the event.

I thought that was considerate.

However, I think this is also a great example of how a sound buffer needs to be added and maintained if the park is going to continue to have these kinds of events.

On another, but related note - last week a strange man with bare feet was walking through our neighborhood and I noticed him as he darted up my neighbors driveway and climbed the chain link fence into the park. It was a creepy experience.

I believe there is another meeting of theFWAC this month (July 21 ?) and I know that our neighborhood representatives would love to attend if that is ok.

I hope you enjoyed the holiday weekend!
